

LORI TRAHAN

SERVING MASSACHUSETTS' 3RD CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

Congresswoman Lori Trahan proudly represents Massachusetts' Third Congressional District, made up of 35 cities and towns including her hometown of Lowell. The granddaughter of immigrants, Lori grew up in a working-class family with her dad working long, hard hours as a union ironworker and her mom juggling part-time jobs while caring for her and her three sisters. She earned a volleyball scholarship to Georgetown University where she became the first person in her family to graduate from college. Lori decided to run for Congress in 2018 – the first time she had ever sought public office – because she wanted to expand economic opportunities for families like the one she grew up in. Lori serves as a member of the House Energy and Commerce Committee and in leadership as a Senior Whip and a member of the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee.
